

THE GIFT OF A LIFETIME.

After almost four decades as a child sponsor, David Grieve has decided to make a difference – one that ensures his values, ethics and caring nature will live on.

"The critical thing, particularly in Africa, is how much kids want to go to school. They'll walk for an hour to go school. Through Plan International, I can help them get there."

David credits his passion for social justice to his mother, a long-time supporter of Plan International. He remembers reading their sponsored child's letters together as a family.

"It's a positive way of making a difference to someone's life and you can actually see it. Apart from health, education is one of the most important things you can give to a child. It's a stepping stone to a better life."

In 36 years supporting Plan International, David has helped many children take the steps to a better life. But it was seeing the impact of his gifts – when visiting his sponsor child in Zimbabwe – that inspired him to leave a gift in his Will.

"Plan International makes sure the child has the best chance to go to school, but the money also goes to projects in the villages. They're helping to build schools, teaching communities to build wells and educating families about child marriage and nutrition."

Knowing exactly where his money would go made David's decision easy.

"With Plan International there's not a big bureaucracy. I know that even a small bequest can make a big difference. It's about making a difference even when you're gone."
